Title: Airfin-coolers

Description: We need three types of airfin coolers. • An airfin-cooler for the triethylene glycol (TEG) unit: Each TEG unit will be equipped with an airfin-cooler upstream of the absorption column. The aim is to cool the hydrogen gas from the cavern before it enters the absorption column. • An airfin cooler for the intermediate stage hydrogen compressors: Each compressor is fitted with an airfin cooler in the intermediate stage. Its purpose is to cool the compressed hydrogen. • An airfin cooler for the discharge of the hydrogen compressors: Each compressor will be equipped with an airfin cooler in the discharge. The purpose is to cool the compressed hydrogen. 5.1.15 Techniques

Framework agreement:

Framework agreement, without reopening of competition

Maximum

participants:

Justification for the duration of the framework agreement: It is important that the framework agreement can cover the full duration of the project and that the airfin-coolers do not have to be re-contracted at the end of the project. Since the realization of the hydrogen storage may span over 12 years, a contract duration for the framework agreement of up to 8 years is too short because retendering could mean a break in standardization. Therefore, the framework agreements are framed for the above-mentioned period. The reasoning for this contract duration is that the project is served by as much standardization as possible.
